DESIGN CRITIQUE

Which existing websites out there most inspired your web site:

I did a lot of research into what other working design professionals were doing with their online portfolio.

More specifically:
www.jessicahische.is www.headsofstate.com
rileycran.com

Which parts of the design are you most proud of?

I was proud that I was able to get my home page to look very closely to what I was already envisioning.

What struggles did you encounter in your design process?

It took me a while to switch my web head on when for years I specialized in print design. Its much easier with print because you can easily move components, but with web, there are many extra steps that all have to jive in order to create something that would take one step in print. With that said, my struggles with developing the page were mostly figuring out what type of design I wanted for my site and executing that. I found myself constantly changing my design as I was coding.

Which struggles did you encounter during page development?

I struggled with keeping up with the different types of ways to code. ie. the difference between <section> and . I didn't realize that within code there were different ways of doing one thing especially when I would be researching other sites and looking at their code and noticing they did it differently.

What did you learn from making your project responsive?

I learned what an important component of web development it is. It was easier to understand since your code should already be set and from there you can figure how much smaller you need to go.
